LETTER OF THANKS

First off, thank you for buying WOTT's Wizard Guide to Enhance Gameplay & FUN! It's amazing, a year ago I never expected to have this many people visiting a website I created for fun. As such, I wanted to extend a warm thanks to everyone and hope you enjoy the book!

HOW I AM EVALUATING SUBCLASSES

So, before we begin the review, we should go over what I am rating and how I get my decision. There are three things that I am reviewing in the in-depth guide. I look over how strong the subclass is in combat, how much utility it has, and, if applicable, its' roleplay ability. Then I separate each subclass into those three categories. This way everyone's playstyle can be seen.

Now, when deciding if something is good for a guide, I look at what the subclass is trying to accomplish. Then look at how successful it succeeds in that task. For instance, in a previous article on the Bladesinger, I concluded it attempts to make you a competitive front line. I then figure out how well that ability succeeds in letting you front line, as well as how soon it comes online.

If it is accomplished at level 2 then it is early game. Level 6 it is Early-Mid, Level 10 Late-Mid, and Level 14 is late game. I rate earlier tiers better as most Dungeon and Dragons Campaigns do not go beyond level 8.

COLOR CODE MEANING

GOLD- "That's gold Jerry! Gold!" If something is highlighted gold, then this means that this not only defines your subclasses but accomplishes it better than almost anything else. I rarely do Gold ratings, so definitely pay attention to them if you see me do it.

Sky Blue –If something is sky blue, it means that this is a defining trait in your subclass but for one reason or another is not game-breaking like gold.

Blue- If it is blue, then it's good but there are plenty of other abilities that perform better. Still better to have than other colors.

Black. Black is ok. These are your more niche things that have bonuses in situations but not useful in others.

Purple – Purple is for a very niche stuff. They have times when they are good, but these are rare and almost never come up. Not the best color to see for an ability.

Red- Red is dead. It is the worse color to see on anything. That said, no matter the color, a class can work so don't ignore a subclass if they have a red. Enough imagination and can-do attitude will make it okay but never optimal.

WHY YOU NEED TO KNOW YOUR PLAYSTYLE

Ever been in a bad campaign? You know, no matter what you do, you feel lackluster and bored. The answer is simple you were not playing your playstyle. I have been in countless campaigns and met a plethora of players. More times than not, the usual reason I see someone drop out of a game is because they are not playing what interests them.

By understanding your playstyle, you can build characters that have higher synergy with it allowing for you to be better at your favorite part. This is because certain subclasses are designed with your playstyle in mind. For instance, a person who loves social situations will find illusion wizards to be more fun to play for the inherent nature illusions play in the field. All subclasses are this way and as such, learning the pro's and con's of each class and how they interact your playstyle is vital to letting you have more fun and more memorable moments when played. To do this, the first step is to understand your playstyle.

UNDERSTANDING YOUR PLAYSTYLE

Now, you know you want to play a wizard. In fact, maybe you read Treantmonk's Guide to Wizards or the Wizard Handbook on RPBOT. These are great guide's telling you what has the best synergy for each class. But what they fail to do, is help you figure out your playstyle. As such, this section here will help you understand your playstyle. So, when you decide to play the wizard, you can understand which subclass might fit your playstyle the most, and how to utilize it. They are broken into 4 main parts: Roleplay, Combat, Utility, and Exploration.

ROLEPLAY

To sum up roleplay people, they are the thespians of the group. These people are the ones who are first to do accents and make decisions for their character then themselves. If you value acting your character and creating intricate backstories 12 pages long for your DM to pour over. This is probably your main playstyle and as such should be taken into account for choices.

COMBAT

Combat focused players are your battle jockeys. They are often building the half elf pact of the chain, hexblade warlock who fires eldritch blast with agonizing blast. They love the thrill of almost dying and either dominating the battlefield or barely surviving. These people may not always be itching for a fight but when it begins, they will not stop. I could describe it a million other ways; to put shortly, they love war.

UTILITY

Utility playstyle are the supporters of the group. They are not the ones flinging spells to kill but using spells to solve. They like to crack the secrets to a long-forgotten puzzle or help out the party achieve a secret mission. These people are here to assist and shine in difficult situations where smashing won't do. If this is your main playstyle then you are usually the strategic leader figuring out the ways to make your team run better.

EXPLORATION

There are the thespians, the battle jockeys, Supporters, and then the inventors. Exploration playstyle focus is for those wanting to not build the meta or build for their background but build the unique. They want to make the worse spell in the game the best finding ways to transform items that people discard into something to marvel at. This is the hardest one to identify with in the finding your playstyle section, as it can be found in any of the three categories. That said, if usually you find yourself switching between the other three categories, this is usually a sign that exploration is your primary category.

PLAYSTYLE CONCLUSION

Now that you know the four main categories of playstyle. Identify which one is your primary and put them in order. Once you do that, it doesn't matter what class you play, you will be able to find a subclass that fits your playstyle and make a difference to your gameplay.

FINDING YOUR PLAYSTYLE

Now that you know the four categories to finding your playstyle. You need to know which one belongs to you. There are a few ways to do this...
